of her own and she is keeping it for Thomas Lefter, a statistical poet, played by Dale Whippley. The other part in the drama is Solon Tucker, Lefter's attorney, played by William Williamson, a very capable in that part.

One by one the "servants" are discharged for misbehaving their tempers and being rude to the tenants in the house. The younger brother insults Lefter when he finds him in the kitchen making love to Olivia, whose name and identity he took have turned no hearts of Crane and Weeks also. Then the younger girl is discharged or giving a bit of her mind to Mrs. Paulkner. Paul Dangerfield finally let out when Crane finds he has been giving shelter to the discharged family.

Lefter's location, Mrs. Paulkner and allows her South. The mother, worked up by the talk of the servants and finally coming across the man she desired to keep away from her daughter, saves for the North. Crane declares his intention of breaking the lease because the servants have not been satisfactory. He goes to work to dinner in order to see Lefter and also to see Lefter's lawyer to come. The latter is very disappointed when he learns he Paulkner have departed.

Crane makes Lefter's way easy by being him at position at $5,000 a year, meanwhile he has been observing him about the home and putting the incidents together reasonably. He tells Jane Ellen he is Olivia Dangerfield. The diningroom scene is one which comes much later.

A cabaret from Vienna with a successful operation on the side of Dangerfield, but the fact that Crane has declared his intention of breaking the lease, which will leave him destitute, almost distracts Jane Ellen.

Left alone after dinner Crane summons her to him. He suspects her dishonesty and asks her to deliver a message to Olivia Dangerfield, telling her of his love. She capitulates and the curtain drops on the lovers.

The play was rehearsed under the direction of Miss Frances Nannan, a teacher of English in the High School and also is given much credit for the manner in which the heavy comedy-drama was carried off. The cult of scientific research and hard work was very evident in last night's performance and many times rewarded the young woman for her diligent efforts.

The characters were commended by many who met them following the play. Their stage poses were perfect. They were spoken very distinctly and without a nervous break. Mary brought Jessie Miller as Mrs. Paulkner was typically the "nebbishy old thing" as Elizabeth Dangerfield described her. Jessie Miller, who really had charge of the Dangerfield family during the absence of the parents, kept off her Irish lines in her role as Jane Ellen, the cook, excellently.

The play was in three acts, covering a period of several days. Stage furnishings were elaborate. These were furnished by Aaron's, Wright-Motter Company, Rosenbaum Brothers, C. M. Hull, William Sellers, F. J. H. Hardware Company, Connelville Machine & Car Supply Company and Hyatt Motor Company.

Miss Jean Armstrong and Miss Irene Adams, also members of the faculty, had charge of the make-ups of those in the play.

In spite of the fact that the play lasted for two and one half hours or more it did not get tiring and the hundreds who packed the auditorium were really surprised to find the hour so late as the final curtain fell.

The story of the eight-year-old Pink devoted to a dead comrade is now being used in public and Sunday schools as an illustration of loyalty in fidelity. After being taken away by his owner Pink can be back the next day and passed several hours more of "sentencing" at the scene of the accident.

Declares Tanlac Ended Stomach Trouble and Actually Built Her Up 55 Lbs.

The wonderful powers of Tanlac are again very forcibly demonstrated. This time in the case of Mrs. Dolores Smith, 3345 Market street, Philadelphia, who said recently: "For a year I was terribly run down. My appetite was so poor it was hardly worth while for me to go to the table, and what little I did eat always caused severe pains in my stomach. On top of all this I never slept well and many nights I would be awake until daylight. "The very first dose of Tanlac seemed to soothe my stomach, and soon I had a perfectly reasonable appetite and was sleeping like a baby every night. I have taken four bottles now and can truthfully say I never felt better in all my life. "Before I started taking Tanlac I weighed one hundred and thirty pounds, but now I actually tip the scales at one hundred and eighty-five. Tanlac surely has done me a world of good."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

At the Theatres

The Paramount

"TRIMMED IN SCARLET," the leading attraction today and tomorrow at this theatre, presents Kathlyn Williams in the leading role. It is the story of a girl who, in the name of the mother, sacrifices her own life for the sake of the mother's love for the child. Yet the telephone of such a time is from 1914, and it is by Jack Conway, who directed the picture. Kathlyn Williams in the role of the mother, originally played by Maxine Elliott in William H. Brown's Broadway stage success, plays all the passion and emotional ability that have made her a screen favorite. Her role is that of Cordelia, Elzinga, a woman of the world who was driven from her home by circumstances of domestic unhappiness. Growing tired of her wandering and drawn irresistibly back to the only girl she had abandoned, she returns to find her daughter, now a charming girl, in love and in trouble, trying to defend the honor of a mother she has never known from the seducing temptations of the daughter's father. In her desire to "protect" her mother, she has even stolen to shield her from blackmail. Other prominent players in the cast are Roy Stewart, Lucille Dickson, Raymond Hatton, Phillips Smalley and David Torrence.

Friday and Saturday Frank Mayo will appear in "The Bolted Door."

The Soisson

"THE VOICE FROM THE MINARET," showing today and tomorrow at this theatre, is an attractive record-breaking picture in all performance. The attraction is a production of Robert Hilborn's novel and features two world-class stars, Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien. The production is one of the most lavish and pretentious pictures that has ever come to the screen, due to the moving of characters from one section of the globe to another, and calling for a vast variety of sets, costumes, and scenery. The picture is a masterpiece of production, and it is a simple matter compared to the task that confronted Director Frank Lloyd when he was given the script of "The Voice From the Minaret." It was not possible to take it in the actual scenes because that would have cost too much, expense and time. So he probably would have been required to complete the production, Lloyd, therefore, had to reproduce parts of England, India and Palestine on the studio lot in Los Angeles. It was not simply a matter of obtaining pictures for the purpose of copying; there were myriads of small details that had to be done out of research—all for the purpose of realism.

Friday and Saturday Katharine MacDonald will be seen in "White Shoulders."

The Orpheum

"GLIMPSES OF THE MOON," Edith Wharton's novel, screened at great expense, provides splendid entertainment at this theatre, and all performances have been witnessed by large crowds. It is a just one-lash setting after another in which Bebe Daniels, Nita Naldi, Eugene Lee Remick, David Powell, Charles Cleveland and Maurice Costello move in the portrayal of the characters of this many-angled drama. For the thorough in villa in Paris here was built a drawing room of the Louis XV style, a picture gallery done in French Gothic, a music room of Marie Antoinette mode, and a beautiful hallway that occupied more than half of the huge studio stage. The Vanderlyn palace in Venice, where much of the action of the story takes place, is an exact reproduction of the interior of an old Venetian palace and is of Italian Renaissance style of architecture. For rare beauty of setting nothing that has been done at the studio has surpassed the room in the film home in New York where Susan Branch's "million dollar" wedding takes place. A section of the Venetian canals was constructed in the studio for the exterior scenes in Venice. Eighteen fathoms of water flowed through the street on which gondolas were propelled. A lodge at St. Mark's and a street in Pansy also were built for scenes in the picture. The picture will also be shown tomorrow.

Friday and Saturday Dorothy Dalton will be seen in "Dark Secrets."

BETTER HOMES

June 4th WEEK to 10th

AMERICA is gradually becoming a nation of homes. Because of the success of the movement in which nearly 1,000 cities and towns participated in last fall, a second demonstration has been set aside for the week of June 4 to 10.

The idea is the outgrowth of a suggestion made by President Harding in 1921. As a part of this campaign communities everywhere prepare model homes and apartments to demonstrate what can be accomplished within a given income.

Indorsing this campaign President Harding said: "I know of no matter so intimately concerned with the life of our people to which we can give greater devotion and service for fundamental improvement than the up-building not only of individual home ownership but the actual improvement of our homes."

Every concern listed below is intensely interested in this campaign. All of them are ready to offer suggestions or ways and means by which to help make America a nation of better homes.

"The plot!" shouted Jarvis as loudly as he could across the shadowy portals of Maspero's. "Ah, I am going to my studio, gentlemen! I have an idea! My new assistant is very clever at painting birds—Monsieur Audubon is a great painter! He has painted all the birds of the world. Now I shall take our plot to the studio, and Monsieur Audubon shall paint it upon it to catch the Emperor Napoleon!"

The two worthies gazed upon him. De Almonaster's face was a study. He too, arose with Jarvis, and the latter could not resist a last glance at his comrade. "The alderman and the admiral—and to the studio to paint the plot! I have the best taste to paint them in with my captain! What a downfall—from place to politics for Dominique! and old Beluche blundering about having a lawful commission!" He put an uneasy finger on the laughing De Almonaster's sleeve: "Orre o, haou! There is no more romance since Lafitte abandoned the town to the stoutest Yankee and yet, last evening, upon the Esplanade, I saw a woman's face, I—know—unashamed, dirty, idle—looking back at her coach. I, Roual—hanging to a lamp-post—made her smile!"

De Almonaster motioned the fester toward the smiling rooms. "The lady who arrived with the British colonel's party? Of course—I am told she had the gallant and when she drove."

Jarvis nodded absently. "They are wishing no bad luck to Colonel Carr beyond that this Sazarac shoots him tomorrow at the Oaks. Oh, well—home!"

From the door they could see the throng in La Bourse de Maspero. The wide door of the small room was packed with silent, attentive youths. Jarvis watched the count of the nearest. "What has happened, De Almonaster? Is the devil still doing as to which to take?"

"Carr loses, steadily," Young Marigny had but recently attained fame by naming a street of the Faubourg Marigny—his paternity now being sent into lots and sold to the inevitable Americans outside the city walls—"Rue de Bagatelle," to commemorate his losses at the game. He therefore parted the throng of his but-crowded coat, thrust his hands upon his breeches of worn white leather and knapped them significantly. "A ruined man, Oh, bien! The British consul, Langhorne, protested, seemingly very uncomfortable at Colonel Carr's insistence at play with this Captain Sazarac, who, it is said, is a mere professional gambler of the river packets with the manners of a gentleman. I will say he has acted so—he tried in every way to avoid Carr's game, but it appears that the British officer involved himself badly on the way from St. Louis."

"How then?" ventured De Almonaster. "A professional gambler at Maspero's?"

"Carr, himself, introduced the fellow; the game must continue," young De Marigny shrugged; "and there is talk of some affair of women between the two!"

"The lady who looked back from her coach," mused Jarvis to himself. "I must see her a new waistcoat."

A massive silver candlestick cast a ruby light upon the cloth about which sat a quartette. Langhorne, Mr. Malvern's consul; a dealer of Maspero's; Colonel Carr of the newly arrived British mission en route to the Mexican, and the stranger from the West.

"Sazarac—" muttered De Marigny, "whose name at the cards has overleaped the town in one night. Mark him, Roual—his name, whispered as silver. Where has the fellow been these years as to know not the fashion?"

The stranger's face was all but averted. The profile gave the impression of utter oblivion to the crowded room. His English small-clothes were rather passed for the period, and the powdered hair above a coat of blue broadcloth and breeches, and the stockings thrust into low silver-buckled shoes gave a quaint distinction to his tall figure. The two young men watched him bronzed back turning a card under the ruby light. After a moment Jarvis yawned audibly; and then a judge came between him and the Count de Almonaster. They looked down upon the short, stout form of Dominique, the alderman. He looked him peered Beluche, the restless scoundrel of Carrington.

The artist stilled again to the bar room. Not even the buzz of interest that followed a violent exclamation in the circle could bring him again from his cogitation. But Dominique, the alderman, had started to his knees with a curious glance at his fellow-buccaneer. "A voice?" he whispered, and stared past the onlookers.

The British officer, flushed with drink and emotion, had looked closer in his eye. "Do you question my word, sir, as to the worth of the watch? Put her upon the block at the Rotunda tomorrow! She would fetch three thousand dollars at Charleston and in this town, sir, if you will find a fatter one—slave, or free woman of color—or even among its reputed beauties!"

There was a stir, the Creole gentleman glanced at one another darkling. Langhorne, the consul, raised his head, but Sazarac had answered slowly:

"Your pardon, sir. I did not know."

of a gentleman could serve in a possible affair, I am the grandson of Don Almonaster y Roxas."

"I thank you, Monsieur." The stranger extended his own "I am Captain Sazarac, recently on service with the United States explorations in the West." He shrugged smilingly: "I thank you, Monsieur."

He turned and met again two elderly men who stared unbelievably. Then the gold-headed admiral of Carrington placed hand upon his shoulder. "Behold us!" he whispered. "I—Beluche—and this, old Dominique! Dogs of old days and green scoundrels and you—the Captain Jean!"

The stranger gazed at them questioningly. "It may be," he mused, "that after the heat is done, I will take the air upon the levees by the old Fort St. Louis. The gentry do not promenade just there, I believe."

Before the eyes of the watching burghers at the coffee house he sauntered down the cobbles of the rue Chartres. The fat and honest alderman muttered; and then, at a laugh from the young count, he turned to leave.

"I shall take the air upon the levees myself, sir," smiled Roual. "Ho, Dominique! Do not fall your captain!"

CHAPTER II

A Ship for a Pirate's Eye.

It was dusk when Roual de Almonaster sauntered along the moldering streets of the city. The night was dark, the moon was low, and the streets were deserted. He was a man of many secrets, and he was now on his way to a meeting with a man who was known to him as "the captain."

"Floor of Pacific" Charted by Use of New Depth Finder.

SUBMERGED OIL IS TRACED

The precise contour of the Pacific continental shelf from San Francisco bay to Point Duquesne, Mex., revealed here recently in the publication by the hydrographic office of the Navy department of a bathymetric chart, shows the floor of the ocean in a detailed way which will enable mariners hereafter to determine the position of their craft when landmarks are obstructed from view by climatic conditions.

The information is based on a recent cruise made by the destroyer Hull and Corry, employing the recently invented Sigsbee fathometer.

The Sigsbee fathometer, a device which determines the depth of the ocean by recording the time required for the sound to reach the bottom and re-echo to the ship, takes a 2,000-foot sounding in less than a minute, supplanting a method which required 15 minutes.

Exceeded Original Purpose.

Originally the California coast at the request of the Carnegie Institute, to aid in defining earthquake faults in the Pacific ocean, the results obtained by the charting cruise far exceeded the original purpose, according to Lieut. Lyman K. Swenson, of the Navy department.

Geologists may employ the chart to trace the extension of oil fields, situated on the southern California coast, to submerged prominences in the same vicinity offshore, it is said.

Elaborating the possibilities of such a chart, Lieutenant Swenson said it would enable anthropologists to trace links between continents in order to reach a determination of the manner in which animals migrated to countries which are now separated by oceans.

With the chart as a basis, mariners approaching the California coast could direct their craft, if equipped with the Sigsbee fathometer, to any harbor by means of deductions from the under interpreted by the chart, navy officers said.

Interesting Revelations.

The expedition furnished revelations regarding the floor of the ocean off the Pacific coast, which show an egg-shaped, submerged prominence on the bed of the Pacific ocean at a point 100 miles southwest of the Farallones islands, off Point San Pedro, California.

The chart also shows that if San Francisco bay and the Pacific ocean were pumped down 100 fathoms (600 feet), the coast line would be removed thirty miles from the Pacific state and connect with the Farallones.

Off the coast of southern California the ocean is spotted with depressions and centers resembling a land condition of mountains and valleys. This condition obtains in a line with the old field off the coast of Santa Barbara county.

DEAD LANGUAGES BACK

French Minister Stirs Protests by Ordering Study of Latin and Greek.

By a decree published in the French official journal, Latin and Greek again have been made compulsory in French schools, but the decision taken by Leon Bernard, minister of public instruction, is not likely to go unopposed. Discussion as to whether the dead languages again should take their place in French education has been going on for two years, and the minister thought it was time it came to an end. So he decided to carry through his reform by decree.

Already his action has called forth a protest from his committee, Victor Berard, president of the senatorial commission on education, and from Deputy Herriot, who has called an interpellation in the chamber.

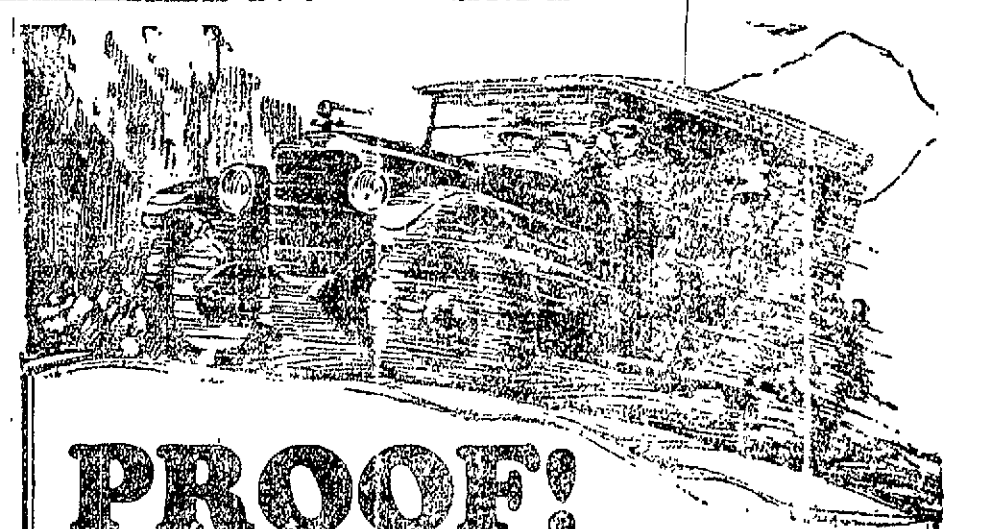

The fight which now seems likely to develop is no longer whether the French boys should be taught Latin and Greek instead of science and modern languages, but whether the minister has the right to impose such an important measure by decree over the heads of the senate.

TEACHING PARROTS TO "TALK"

Skill and Patience Required to Turn Out Birds That Can Be Sold to Advantage.

There are quite a number of people who make a living by teaching parrots to talk. It is a task that requires patience and skill.

Each bird is put in a cage by himself and covered with a bag, which prevents the parrot from seeing out and at the same time admits sufficient light. Then the "schoolmaster" stands in front of the cage and says what he wants the birds to learn. The words

DEBT AGAINST PECHIN CHAPEL IS WIPED OUT

Mortgage Publicly Burned at Rally Attended by Large Gathering.

JOKE PLANT TO BE FIRED

Special to The Courier.
DUNBAR, June 6. Last Friday was a memorable day in the history of Pechin Chapel, for, for the first time in its history the building was free from debt, and the note sold for years against the chapel paid and properly cancelled, was publicly burned in the presence of the congregation, and the blame of the note, blotted out. The people rejoiced for the building was free and none could prevent its use in service.

Present and participating in the service making addresses, were: G. B. Jones, M. D. Phillips and Rev. W. A. Michael of Uniontown; David S. Leach, superintendent of the Sunday school; Charles A. Martin, teacher of the Adult Bible class, and J. L. Ketter, teacher of the youth's class. All talks bore on the importance of the church and the par excellence of the Bible. Music was furnished by the local choir under the direction of Mrs. F. E. Long of Uniontown, who had accompanied her husband.

In connection with the exercise the Long, who does Bible work all over the county, held a community camp, adding to the interest.

That the debt was cancelled is attested by the persistent efforts of David S. Leach and David Baker, who were the leaders in raising the money, but the people generally responded.

The chapel seems to have a more up-to-date feeling now that the church is free of debt. Every month things are held at 10 o'clock every Wednesday evening and Sunday school at 2:30 on a Sunday afternoon.

The Dunbar Fire Brick Company of Mount Pleasant is making extensive improvements in the plant, and especially in the kilns. Substantial walls are being put up from the office to the stockyard, and new modern rollers to catch the weight of the car automatically, relieving the handling of the clay, and thus not only increasing the output, but lessening the expense. The wall is nearly completed, and adds greatly to the appearance of the plant.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce McNair have moved from Ferguson to Beeson Mill, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Overly of Mount Pleasant have moved into the house at Ferguson formerly occupied by the McNairs.

Mrs. Sarah R. Herrington of Keffers is having her property improved by the erection of a new coal house and a complete new fence. Mrs. Herrington has a plan in mind to build a garage in the market for an automobile, and that the building is for coal and a garage.

Mrs. John Thorpe of Beeson Mill, who entered a relapse last week, is somewhat improved today. She is still seriously ill, however, and fears that she may not recover and be entertained.

Edward Miller, a student of Dunbar township high school, and his sister, both of Keffers, are suffering from typhoid.

The June 25 of the old beech avenue school works are completed and will probably be fired within the next few days. Superintendent J. W. Jones, Sr., is in charge of the entire plant, and is preparing to fire the kiln at 11 o'clock. The date is a convenient one for the school, and eighth grades in North town township will be held at the high school building next Friday evening, beginning at 8 o'clock. A program has been prepared embracing each kind of the town up in which at least 100 pupils in each grade from school to several schools will participate with appropriate readings or recitations. Music will be furnished by the pupils of several schools. The program is elaborate, and in the closing the exercises certificates of promotion will be given the pupils by Superintendent Principal Thomas H. Means. All the pupils of both grades are expected to be present, and their parents are also cordially invited.

Special services will be held at 8 o'clock at the First Methodist Church next Sunday, the occasion being the holding of the regular quarterly conference of the local conference. The Rev. Doctor Campbell, presiding, will be at the altar. It will be held on Friday evening and remain open Sunday. A special effort will be made to have a hundred per cent attendance.
